Omorovicza Budapest Institute

Budapest - HUNGARY

In Hungary, the earth's thin crust brings thermal waters closer to the surface, enriching them with minerals as they rise. For over 2,000 years, these healing springs have inspired the creation of thermal baths—SPA: Sanitas Per Aqua, or Health Through Water.

In 1861, the Omorovicza family built the Rácz Fürdő in Budapest on the site of a 16th-century Ottoman bath. Its waters' transformative effects inspired Stephen and Margaret de Heinrich de Omorovicza to explore their properties further. Collaborating with a Nobel Prize-winning dermatological lab, they discovered the water's extraordinary mineral content—over 26 minerals, including magnesium, vital for cellular energy.

This legacy lives on in Omorovicza's Budapest and London Institutes, modern sanctuaries of beauty, rejuvenation, and healing. Fusing Hungarian spa heritage with advanced skincare science, the Institutes offer immersive treatments and transformative experiences, honouring the brand's commitment to wellness and innovation.
